

Bolivia High Andes Qualitative Field Study

December 3 - 11, 2024
Bolivia

The Kimberly Green Latin American and Caribbean Center (LACC) at Florida International University (FIU) is accepting applications for its 2023 Bolivia High Andes Qualitative Field Study for Community College and Minority-Serving Faculty.

This international interdisciplinary seminar on the Pueblos Originarios (indigenous communities) of the High Andes in Bolivia is designed to examine and interrogate more typical approaches to "Indigenous Studies" in the US and support the comparative study of similarities, differences, challenges, and opportunities that cut across various native populations in the Americas.

Participants will directly engage with pueblo leaders and community members, scholars and policy makers based in La Paz, El Alto, Tiahuanaco, Uyuni, and Lake Titicaca. Field study sites include sacred and secular spaces of spiritual, socio-cultural, political, environmental, and economic significance to Bolivia's Pueblos Originarios.

The program will be in Spanish, with some content in Quechua, Aymara and Uru (translation to Spanish provided). It is open to US-based Community College or Minority-Serving Institution faculty and administrators who speak Spanish and incorporate Latin American- or Native American-related content into their teaching, research or professional service or serve a high percentage of Native American students. Funding is available. Space is limited.

The program will be enforced in accordance with Bolivian requirements..
